Martin Bell OBE

Martin Bell has seen a hugely varied and successful career in both politics and journalism.

A graduate of King's College, Cambridge, Martin joined the BBC in 1962, becoming a foreign affairs correspondent and war reporter. Martin reported from many theatres of conflict, including Vietnam, the Middle East and Northern Ireland. He was the Royal Television Society's Reporter of the Year in 1977 and 1993 and was appointed OBE in 1992 after extensive reporting in the Gulf War.

In 1997, he successfully contested the Tatton parliamentary constituency, becoming an independent Member of Parliament with a majority of over 11,000. He was the first successful independent parliamentary candidate since 1951. Martin left Parliament in 2001 and has since returned to broadcasting and become an ambassador for UNICEF.

We hope you are able to join Martin and the branch for an evening of live music, canapés and drinks, including red, white and sparkling wines, gin & tonic and soft drinks.
